The American Lawyer notes that "Bartlit Beck has become one of the country’s best known brands for courtroom advocacy thanks to a model that cherishes one-on-one mentorship, demands teamwork and envisions a partnership track for every lawyer at the firm." The article cited Lex Machina data that showed Bartlit Beck goes to trial in nearly 20% of its matters, more than double the percentage of "four of the nation's best-known Big Law trial firms..."

The article describes how the firm's model and culture results in collaboration among associates and partners that generates results for clients, stating that "[t]here are a number of reasons why Bartlit Beck goes to trial so often. The simplest is that they win."
